

administration, we will strive to do the following: 1) unify and consolidate the local, affiliated and "block" agencies of the national government; 2) consolidate the 18 semigovernment corporations and simplify and rationalize other specially chartered and licensed corporations; 3) introduce a system of retirement for public officials and reduce the number of national public officials by 37 thousand; 4) restrain excessive administrative intervention in the private sector; 5) radically reorganize the articles of licensing and authorizations; and 6) carry out the smooth disclosure of information.

JAPAN SOCIALIST PARTY (JSP) 52.80
ASUKATA, CHAIRMAN

1. Inflation

We will restrict unjustified price increases by invoking the relevant laws (生活二法) to prevent the cornering of markets and the hoarding of goods, by strengthening safeguards against price gouging, and by institutionalizing the public disclosure of the costs. We will freeze increases in the present public utility charges and eliminate anticipatory rate increases. We will devise a plan for the production and shipping of vegetables and thereby realize a stable supply. We will reform the distribution machinery and fulfill consumer administration. We will restrain inflation by strengthening the enforcement of the Anti-Monopoly Law and democratizing the Bank of Japan's policy committee.

2. Welfare

We will abolish the differentials among the various types of pensions and unify the pension system. We will realize an individual pension system, a minimum pension system, and a system that links pensions and the retirement age of 60 years. We will abolish nurse attendant fees and the differentials in benefits paid to the principal beneficiary and his family, and we will reform the system of medical treatment that is based on making money on prescribing drugs. We will expand free medical care to old people by increasing the number of public health care centers, hospitals specializing in the care of old people, and nursing visits. To fulfill welfare, it is necessary to make payments according to the ability to pay.

3. Education

By quickly achieving "forty student classrooms" and selecting with care the content of education, we can realize education that is complete and at the same time is less rigid. We will institute compulsory education through high school and get rid of examination hell by eliminating high school entrance examinations and admitting all who want to attend, by establishing more national universities, and by reforming the entrance examination system. By making free of charge compulsory education and expanding aid to private schools, we will strive to dissolve the financial burden on parents and correct the differentials in the ability to pay. We will fulfill the education of small children by unifying nurseries and kindergartens. We will democratize education administration by publicly electing members to boards of education.

4. Energy

We will develop and make practical use of domestic coal. We will develop hydropower, solar heat, thermal heat, wind power, tidal power, and other natural sources of energy, and establish regional energy supply systems. We will reorganize the industrial structure to abolish waste, conserve energy, and reduce the level of dependence on oil. We will further cooperation in the development of energy reserves through peace diplomacy and thereby secure and stabilize the supply of crude oil. We will carry out a complete review of nuclear power, and we will affirm safety by discontinuing new construction until the review is concluded.

5. Security and Defense

We will establish solidarity with the nonaligned countries and set up a peace security system that includes the U.S., China, and the Soviet Union. We will promote a nonaligned neutral peace diplomacy that includes the establishment of a nuclear free zone, and we aim to abrogate the security treaty with the U.S. We will seek the immediate withdrawal of the Soviet Union from Afghanistan, and we oppose the U.S. sanctions against Iran. We will stop increases in defense expenditures, which is aimed to make Japan a military superpower. We will establish civilian control of the Self-Defense Forces, and we aim, taking into account public opinion, to reduce and disband the Self-Defense Forces.

6. Political Ethics

In order to sweep away corrupt money politics and structural corruption, we will disclose the assets of politicians and high level public officials and forbid "amakudari" by high level bureaucrats within 3 years of retirement. We will forbid political contributions by large corporations, expand the public management of elections, and strengthen both the regulations holding a candidate jointly responsible for election law violations committed by his campaign manager or finance officer and the penalties for corruption. We will strengthen the right to investigate the government, enact a public information law, strengthen the authority of the Board of Audit to investigate public corporations, and establish a securities exchange council to reform the system that fosters corruption.

7. Administrative Reform

The essential way to restore the government's finances is to correct the unfair tax system by raising corporate taxes and taxing interest and dividend income. In order to strive for administrative reform that will overthrow the bureaucracy, we will realize a just, democratic, and efficient administration. We will accomplish this by establishing a committee to supervise administration, promoting the decentralizing of national administration to the local governments, establishing a system of inspecting administration with the participation of the public officials in the field, distributing public officials according to administrative demand, and reforming public corporations.
